Driving Close by a Seminary. There's a fluttering of white wings in the dovecotes of learning. The maidens who have served their sentence and are getting their discharge from the pen-itentiary, are filling the air with graduating essays, and the anxious parents are welcoming them out with effusive affection, but not unmixed with wonderings of what they are to do with them. "I was going to call at a seminary on business," said a fellow the other night, "and as I drove into the grounds I saw at every window at least one young female head gazing out into the world. If a man wants to feel how much interest attaches to him let him drive close to a seminary at are lifted and put down like paws of an idle hour. A National Type Does Exist. Anna Bowman Dodd, in The Critic, discusses the questions of a fixed national type in its relation to American literature, and decides that such a type does exist as a basis for our literature. She says: "Foreign customs, habits, language, neither affect nor influence us. It is the American who influences and imposes, just of in the case of language, German, Swedish, and French lose themselves in our native English tongue.

"These facts ought to be proof enough that at least a national type exists. It can not be argued away. It is a type which is neither English, nor German, nor French. It is American—a new man, made, kinds of birds, is very apt to miss his first if you please, out of several old ones, but half-dozen birds. They rise too near him still an entirely new person in the family of nations. In action, in statesmanship, in military achievement, this type has found its embodiment in such men as Lincoln and Grant. Could these great men ever be taken for other than Americans?"-The Current.

Good Land in the Staked Plains. And now it turns out, on examination. that the abused Staked Plains in Texas are good farm lands. I wrote the same a year ago, and now Mr. Isaiah Troufoust, who has just spent three months examining the so-called Staked Plains in the Panhandle, tells me he has never seen a finer and visions, for it is related that they body of cultivatable land as this same | made their first money on information ob-Staked Plain.

WAY TO HUNT THEM.

Chicken Shooting in Texas a Fascinating Sport-Quick and Skillful Work Some- CAPITAL times Required-A Graphic Description -A Novice Apt to Miss.

Houston boasts of quite a large number of Nimrods who go out almost daily to hunt prairie chickens and other game. Prairie chicken shooting has the prefer- 20-dewif ence over most hunting sport, for the reason that it requires carefully trained dogs and a sufficient practice with the gun to shoot "upon the wing" without a moment's warning. The prairie chicken is an accommodating bird, and may be hunted in pleasant weather; this fact may partly account for the ardor with which it is pursued. Chicken shooting, however, is a fascinating sport in itself, the same being very strong of wing, and exceedingly palatable. Daylight find the hunters-for they generally, like their dogs, hunt in pairs-leaving the farm-house where they have passed the night. At the word of command the dogs leap into the wagon, and a few moments' drive brings the hunters to a "likely field." The hunters alight, slip a cartridge into each barrel of their guns and turn into the field. The dogs are eager for the sport to begin, and at the words "Hunt 'em up" and a wave of the hand spring out into the stubble at full speed, one hunter and one dog to each side of the field. The dogs work from the edge of the field to the center, cross, keep on to the other edge, re- W. H. TAYLOR. turn and cross again, covering the field in Jos. MOORE ... ever varying and irregular circles. Now and then one pauses and snuffs the wind blowing down the field, or turns quickly aside from his course and follows up for a few yards an old scent in the hope of finding it grow stronger.

"HERE THEY ARE!" Suddenly one of them, running at full speed in long, elastic bounds, with ear and tail waving as he leaps, falls flat on his belly as if paralyzed and remains motionless as a stone. Quick as is the movement, the other dog has also crouched and is pointing at the first dog, "backing him up" with implicit confidence, though the scent may not have reached his keen nostrils. The sagacious animals turn their heads and look back at their masters with intelligent eyes, as if to say: "Hurry up; here they are!" The men move rapidly and noiselessly up to the first dog. The intelligent animal, who has not moved a muscle, except to turn his head and look back, rises slowly and cronchingly to his feet, and with nose extended steals slowly forward, intelligence and wary caution expressed in every movement of his eloquent body. His feet PUMPS-Direct Acting Pumps for irrigation of velvet, and his progress is noiseless and as

At other times the whole covey will rise together, and it requires quick and skillful shooting to make each of the four barrels count. If the country and flight of the birds allow, it is sometimes possible to "mark down" a covey and follow them from field to field, unless they fly into the corn, when pursuit > is hopeless. To a novice the sport is wildly exciting. The intelligent and admirable working of the dogs, the intense excitement of the moment when the birds are rising with the noise and speed of a skyrocket from the stubble beneath their very feet, and the exhilaration of a successful shot give it a fascination hard to describe to those who have not tried it. The novice, although he may be a good shot at other and look so large that it does not look possible to miss a bird, and he is very apt to shoot without aim. After a few misses however, he finds that they fly like an express train, and must be covered by the sights of the gun, and quickly, too. After that his luck improves, and he finds that, like everything else, it is easy when you know how, and one of the most fascinating of all field sports.-Houston
